

"I have not had a recurrence of the cancer. With ovarian cancer, a recurrence is something you expect. I believe the infusions have boosted my immune system so I can better resist a recurrence."

OLIVE BURNS, ATCHISON, KANSAS

Olive was diagnosed with ovarian cancer, and she was told she had a 50/50 chance of survival with her diagnosis. After surgery and chemotherapy, she decided to try the vitamin C infusions at KU's Program in Integrative Medicine. Although it's a long drive from Atchison, Kan., she's made the weekly trip for five years. In that time, she's found a new family and a dedicated support group in both the program's wonderful doctors and her fellow patients.

A different approach to cancer treatment – infused with hope

At the KU Program in Integrative Medicine, we provide a healing environment for our patients using intravenous infusions of Vitamin C along with a regimen of supplements to improve your health and help fight your cancer. We are a nationally recognized integrative medicine facility, focused on patient care, research and education.

During our program, you will receive regular blood testing, a personalized plan to maximize your nutrition, increased vitamin and mineral levels, as well as the Vitamin C infusions. The best part is that with every visit, you'll meet with a doctor who will work closely with you and give you the support you need.

ABOUT THE VITAMIN C INFUSIONS

Research shows that intravenous Vitamin C at high doses – along with chemotherapy or radiation – kills cancer cells in the early stages of cancer. For those in the later stages of cancer, the infusions may improve your quality of life. The Vitamin C infusions are a supplementary treatment to traditional cancer fighting treatments and surgery. We work cooperatively with your oncologist, aligning your infusions with your chemotherapy.
